Sensitive Magog Coordination

It's often possible to judge importance by the measures taken to secure it. Reliance on human couriers and remote rendezvous' indicate high-stakes communication where the risk of interception by a near-peer or superior adversary is such a grave threat that it cannot be mitigated by the strongest available encryption. When Russia and Iran take these precautions, near-peer or superior entities are Israel, NATO allies, and China. You can assume it's not China.

In addition to precautions to hide private communication, preference toward public communication can also provide clues. When you hear aggressive or vocal rhetoric, it's [probably] safe to assume it's just rhetoric. Like the noise about using nuclear weapons in Ukraine. On the other hand, when parties abruptly go silent, there [may] be more reason to be concerned.

Well... it's happening. No, not Russia utilizing nukes against Ukraine/NATO or vice-versa, something different. There has been an ominous increase of in-person meetings between Russia, Iran, Turkey, and a few allies and proxies.
